

UGONNA OKORIE

Ugonna Okorie is a recent graduate of the University of Louisville receiving her Bachelor of Science in Public Health and a minor in Healthcare Management. Ugonna's public health experience includes serving as a summer intern with Beaumont Health and a COVID-19 Contact Tracing Specialist for UofL's Department of Environmental Health & Safety. During her final year of undergrad, she served as the University's Student Body President and Student Constituency Representative on the Board of Trustees. She is passionate about the intersectionalities between public health and social justice with hopes of eliminating inequities within the healthcare system. In Fall 2022, she will continue her education to pursue a Master of Science in Public Health (MSPH) in Health Policy at the Johns Hopkins University Bloomberg School of Public Health.